Choosing search terms.

- Start with the obvious – if you're looking for general information on vibration, try vibration.

The image shows a screenshot of a Google search interface. The search bar contains the word "Vibration". To the right of the search bar are buttons for "Search", "Advanced Search", and "Preferences". Below the search bar, there are tabs for "Web" and "Images". The search results are displayed below the tabs. The first result is a link to the Wikipedia page for "Vibration". The second result is a link to a page about "Vibration at work – health and safety in the workplace". The third result is a link to a page about "Acoustics and Vibration Animations". The fourth result is a link to a page about "Vibration". On the right side of the search results, there is a sidebar with a "Personalize" button and a search result for "Monitoring Tech". The search results are numbered "Results 1 - 10 of about 42,100,000".

Capitalization Does NOT Matter

- Google searches are NOT case sensitive.
- All letters, regardless of how you type them, will be understood as lower case.
- For example: searches for shear center, SHEAR CENTER, and sHeAr CeNtEr will all return the same results.

Google's 10 Word Limit

- Until recently, Google wouldn't accept more than 10 keywords at a time.
 - Any keyword past 10 was simply ignored.
- Google now accepts up to 32 keywords.
 - Stick with 10.

The Order of Keywords Matters

A search for vibration absorber control yields not the same number of hits as a search for absorber vibration control ,

How to get to Advanced Search Page

After you've entered your search terms, you might want to try the I'm Feeling Lucky button, which takes you straight to the most relevant website that Google found for your query. You won't see the search results page at all, but if you did, the "I'm Feeling Lucky" site would be listed on top. For example, if you're looking for the Stanford University homepage, just enter Stanford and click I'm Feeling Lucky instead of the Google Search button. Google will take you directly to "www.stanford.edu."

How to use the Google calculator

Google's calculator tries to understand the problem you are attempting to solve without requiring you to use special syntax. However, it may be helpful to know the most direct way to pose a question to get the best results. Listed below are a few suggestions for the most common type of expressions (and a few more esoteric ones).

Most operators come between the two numbers they combine, such as the plus sign in the expression 1+1.

Operator	Function	Example
+	addition	3+44
-	subtraction	13-5
*	multiplication	7*8
/	division	12/3
^	exponentiation (raise to a power of)	8^2
%	modulo (finds the remainder after division)	8%7
choose	X choose Y determines the number of ways of choosing a set of Y elements from a set of X	18 choose 4

Understanding a Search Result

Each Google Scholar search result represents a body of scholarly work. This may include one or more related articles, or even multiple versions of one article. For example, a search result may consist of a group of articles including a preprint, a conference article, a journal article, and an anthology article, all of which are associated with a single research effort. Grouping these articles allows us to more accurately measure the impact of research and to better present the different research efforts in an area.

Each search result contains bibliographic information, such as the title, author names, and source of publication. One set of bibliographic data is associated with the entire group of related articles and is our best estimate at the representative article for the group. This bibliographic data is based on information from the articles in the group, as well as on citations to these articles from other scholarly works.

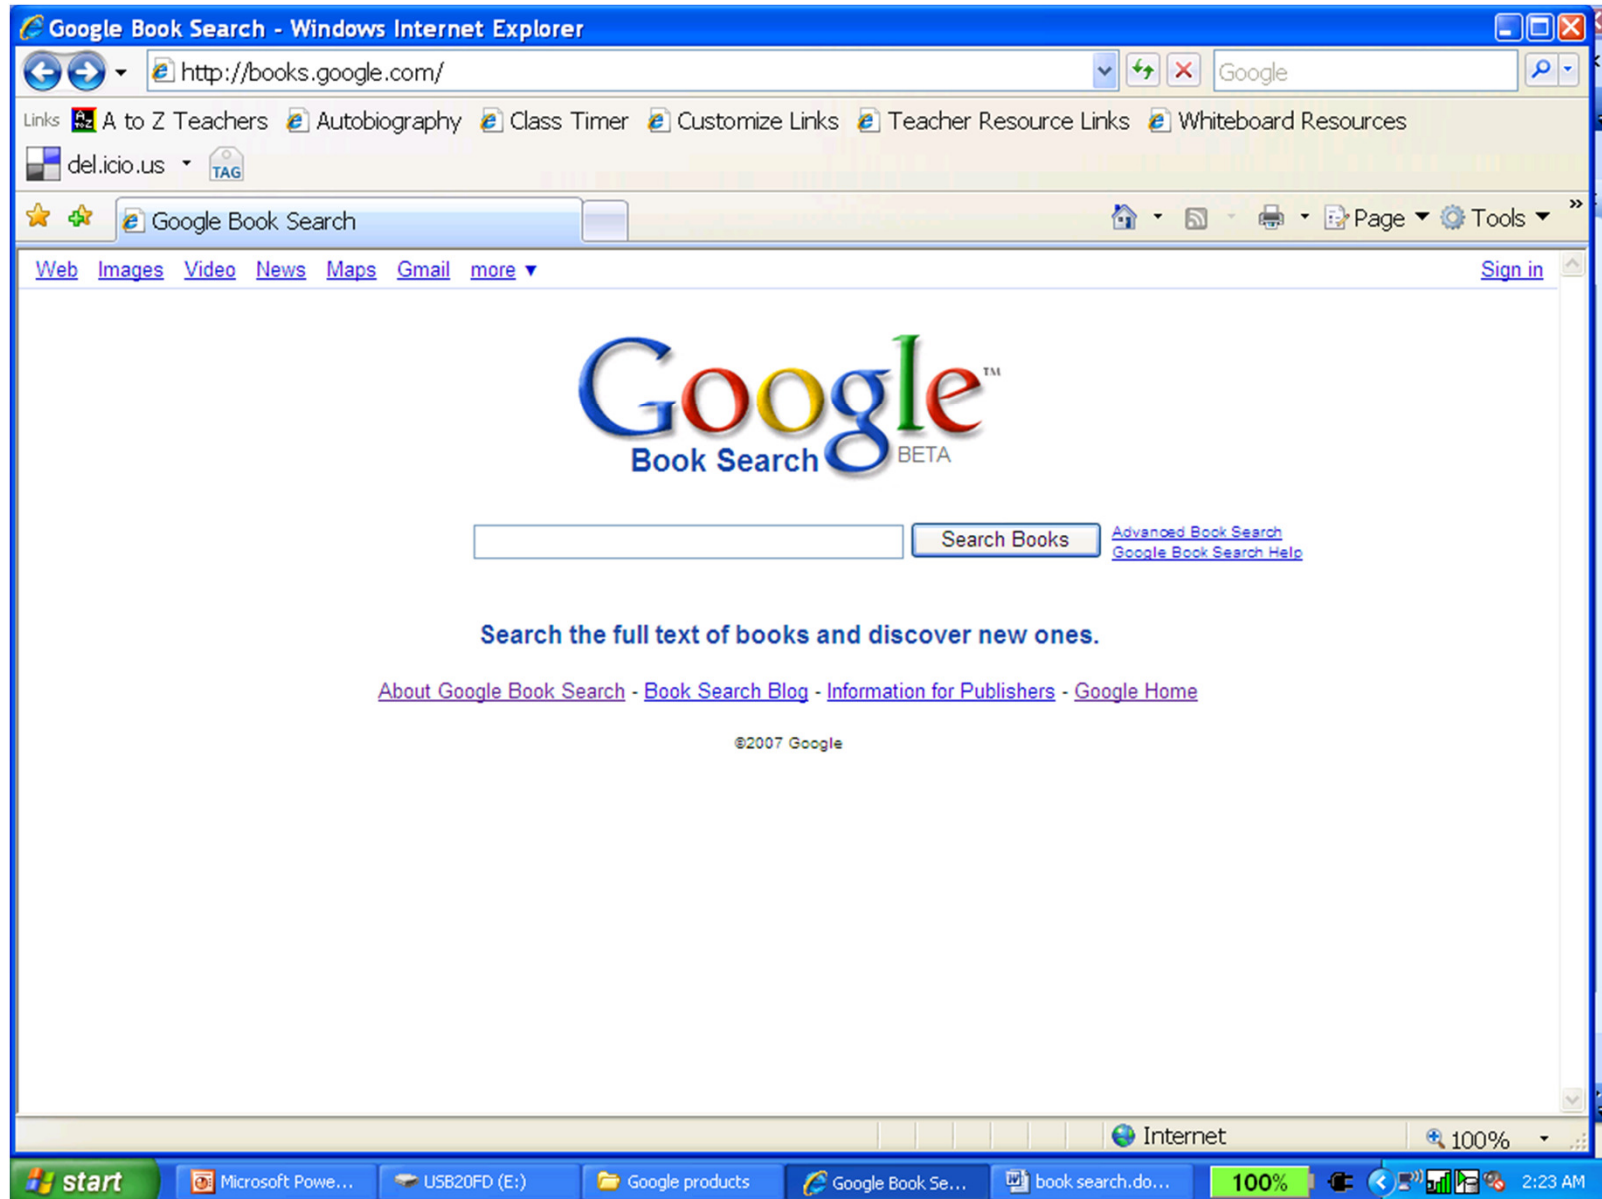

Explanation of Links

1. Title – Links to the abstract of the article, or when available on the web, the complete article.
2. Cited By – Identifies other papers that have cited articles in the group.
3. Related Articles – Finds other papers that are similar to articles in this group.
4. Library Links (online) – Locates an electronic version of the work through your affiliated library's resources. These links appear automatically if you're on campus.
5. Library Links (offline) – Locates libraries which have a physical copy of the work.
6. Group of – Finds other articles included in this group of scholarly works, possibly preliminary, which you may be able to access. Examples include preprints, abstracts, conference papers or other adaptations.
7. Web Search – Searches for information about this work on Google.
8. BL Direct – Purchase the full text of the article through the British Library. Google receives no compensation from this service.

Geronimo's Story of His Life by Charles M. Eastman sacrifice was deemed necessary. Sometimes the offending one was punished.

Page 21

If an Apache had allowed his aged parents to suffer for food or shelter, if he had neglected or abused the sick, if he had profaned our religion, or had been unfaithful, he might be banished from the tribe.

The Apaches had no prisons as white men have. Instead of sending their criminals into prison they sent them out of their tribe. These faithless, cruel, lazy, or cowardly members of the tribe were excluded in such a manner that they could not join any other tribe. Neither could they have any protection from our unwritten tribal laws. Frequently these outlaw Indians banded together and committed depredations which were charged against the regular tribe. However, the life of an outlaw Indian was a hard lot, and their bands never became very large; besides, these bands frequently provoked the wrath of the tribe and secured their own destruction.
